

Chris Harris (CC'd) is the recently appointed National Education Director of the Holocaust Centre. he has a strong teaching background and is now responsible for developing cross-curricular educational programmes in line with the NZ curriculum and vision of the Holocaust Centre. These programmes of learning to link to the values of tolerance, diversity and respect for difference.

He is keen to work with educators at seminars and symposia around teaching programmes and bring teachers from a variety of teaching backgrounds together to develop a network of local and regional educators who can offer programmes to schools and other groups such as adults, religious or tourist groups.

Perhaps there is someone in the Israel focus group who works in the educational sphere and who might be interested in working with Chris and the opportunities that will open for all. One of those opportunities is the chance to join other kiwi teachers for a trip to Israel and learning at Yad Vashem - an experience that is professionally rewarding, spiritually enriching, and instills also a better understanding and love for Israel.
